

KDHX was designed to work outside the norms of business and commercial radio. It was a radio station started and run by volunteers.

Unfortunately, KDHX's leadership has filed for bankruptcy and is courting support from a national conglomerate of stations based out of Tennessee.

By supporting the volunteers' 501(c)(3) organization, you can help us continue our fight to reclaim the station, bringing back beloved old and new DJs, sharing original programming, interviews with artists, and community connections we've been missing over the past few years.

KDHX began in 1987 as a volunteer-driven community station, taking calls from listeners and featuring local and touring artists with upcoming shows. Hosting some of the most unique events in town.

The mission of KDHX is to build community through media, and the volunteers (who have all been fired) look forward to bringing this mission back to KDHX.

Whether you are an ardent listener or new to the station, know that KDHX is an important cultural resource not to be taken for granted. At its height, KDHX:

- *Presented shows at venues around the region
- *Hosted album listening parties
 - *Showcased the talents of artists who might not have had airplay elsewhere
 - *Featured arts reviews from organizations as varied as the opera and community theater
- *Through underwriting, served as a space for arts organizations and small businesses to get the word out about their offerings
